

Humanist Meeting

Friday, November 16, 2007 7:00 - 9:30 P.M.

Topic:

If you love them, let them love you.

Why do some people experience perpetual loneliness, waiting eternally to find the 'right' person, only to have a 'wrong' person emerge? Most of us have experienced this problem at some time.

As everyone knows, to love someone doesn't mean that the love will be reciprocated. Still, humanistic psychology reveals that love begets love and is the foundation of all good and enduring relationships. But what is it? How is it achieved?

A down-to-earth and unabashed analysis, and paths to a positive resolution of this personally important problem, will be presented by Joseph Ben-David, Humanist Counselor.

Joe has given more than 3,000 lectures and seminars on the philosophy, psychology and spirituality of Humanism, which have helped hundreds of people toward greater awareness and realism in their approach to living. You may see a list of his talks at:

This unusual presentation may be of value to people interested in helping themselves and others to better understand the conscious and unconscious processes and motives involved in intimacy and dialogical relating.

Sponsored by the Church of Humanism.

Held at: The Fourth Universalist Society

4 West 76 St., corner Central Park West, New York City
